

Dear Hiring Manager,

If there is one thing my career has taught me so far, it is this: great digital experiences are built where creativity, structure, and collaboration meet. That is exactly why I am applying for a role within front-end development or project leadership/Scrum Master positions.

My background is a blend of technology, design, and people. I am currently completing a two-year Front-End Development program at Noroff, where I work daily with HTML, CSS, JavaScript, responsive design, UI/UX, accessibility, Git, APIs, and building single-page applications. I have a deep love for visual design and problem-solving — the joy of watching an idea grow from a simple sketch into a living, breathing user interface never gets old.

At the same time, I bring something unique: years of experience leading people, projects, and large-scale events. As Chairperson of Nannestad Equestrian Club, I managed teams, budgets, schedules, stakeholders, volunteers, and coordinated several major competitions, including international FEI endurance events. These projects demanded clear communication, fast decision-making, risk management, and a steady hand — skills that translate naturally to Scrum, agile team leadership, and IT project coordination.

I thrive when I can help a team stay focused, motivated, and aligned. Whether I am building a component library, solving a UI bug, facilitating a sprint planning meeting, or turning a chaotic task list into a clear roadmap, I am in my element. I am structured by nature, creative by passion, and genuinely enjoy helping people succeed together.

I am now looking for an opportunity where I can contribute both technically and organizationally — either as a front-end developer or in a hybrid role where communication, planning, and user understanding are just as important as code.

Thank you for considering my application. I would love the chance to bring my mix of technical skills, creativity, and leadership experience to your team. I'm excited about the possibility of contributing to real projects and growing alongside inspiring colleagues.

Kind regards,

Gro Anita Bråthen
